

CMHR RESEARCHERS APPOINTED ADJUNCT PROFESSORS AT UWINNIPEG

Clint Curle is presently a researcher at the Canadian Museum for Human Rights. Previously a professor at Carleton University's Law department, Clint taught graduate and undergraduate courses in Human Rights and Transnational Justice, with a focus on theories of human rights and research methodology. Clint formerly directed an international development NGO called World Hope, and has designed and supervised transitional justice and human rights enhancement projects in several African and eastern European countries. For eight years he served as a Methodist parish pastor, including a stint as volunteer chaplain at the Fort Saskatchewan Correctional Centre just north of Edmonton, Alberta. He has published two books on human rights: Humanité : John Humphrey's alternative account of human rights (UTP, 2007) and New Directions in Human Rights: The Augustana Distinguished Lectures 2007 (University of Alberta/Chester Ronning Centre, 2008). Clint's educational background includes a PhD (Political Science), MA (theology), MA (Legal Studies) and an LLB. He currently holds adjunct positions at Carleton University (Law), the University of Manitoba (Law), and the University of Winnipeg (Global College).

Dr. Rhonda L. Hinthér holds a PhD in History from McMaster University. She has worked as a curator at the Canadian Museum of Civilization and has taught Canadian history extensively at the university level. Her research interests include oral history, radical and social justice activism, women's rights, and labour and immigration history. She co-edited the recently released book Re-Imagining Ukrainian Canadians: History, Politics, and Identity (University of Toronto Press, 2011) and is currently completing a book on Ukrainian radicalism. She regularly consults on historical films, most recently "The Oldest Profession in Winnipeg" and "Black Field," an official selection of the 2009 Vancouver Film Festival. Dr. Hinthér holds appointments as adjunct professor at Carleton University and the University of Winnipeg.

Tricia Logan is a PhD candidate at Royal Holloway, University of London in the department of History and she holds a BA and MA in Native Studies; both from the University of Manitoba. Logan's professional and academic research experience over the past decade has focused primarily on residential school research, developing oral histories from residential school Survivors, Métis history, and Métis traditional knowledge.

Isabelle Masson is a PhD candidate in Political Science at York University, Toronto. Her most recent role was as a Lecturer in Political Science at the Université du Québec à Montréal (UQAM), where she taught courses in International Relations at both graduate and undergraduate levels. She has been a research associate at the Centre d'Études des Politiques Étrangères et de Sécurité in Montreal, the York Center for International and Security Studies in Toronto, the University of Cape Town and Center for Conflict Resolution in South Africa, where she undertook research on human security issues for her Master dissertation. She has also worked in Germany, Kenya and Uganda, on a participatory research project on the Proliferation of Small Arms and Light Weapons in the Horn of Africa Region. Her work has been published in both English and French.

Armando Perla is a researcher at the Canadian Museum for Human Rights and an adjunct professor at the faculty of law of University of Manitoba and at Global College at the University of Winnipeg. Perla holds a Master's in International Human Rights Law (LLM) from Lund University and the Raoul Wallenberg Institute for Human Rights and Humanitarian Law in Sweden. He also has a Bachelor of Laws from L'Université Laval in Québec City (LLB). Armando also studied political sciences at the University of Winnipeg, and has extensive experience working with human rights organizations on a variety of issues around the world.